Nailor's alley, between Ninth and Tenth and N and O streets, by attempting to kill a white woman named Mary Brooks. The affair grew out of a fend of long standing between the women. In the struggle Mary was badly cut with a batchet about the body. After the combatants were separated Celin started up the alley with the intention of seeking vengeance on another woman, but before she could do so Officer Law arrested her. She was subsequently released on bond by Judge Snell for her appearance at the police court, and when the case was called in the police court resterday Celia failed to appear, and an attachment was issued for her arrest.
